Subject: A few new user questions and comments
Posted by gerryw on Thu, 21 Jun 2007 00:23:36 GMT

Hello All,

I've just recently come across upp. I have spent some time looking around the site and reading the forums. Overall, I found several things I like about upp. However, there is what appears to be a major show stopper. Apparently, the U++ library has a dependency on "theIDE"? Is this true? I am very surprised by this. Especially After reading several places on the site that talk about superior object oriented design etc.. Don't get me wrong I'm not complaining. I just don't understand how this happened. Is this really the case? Is it by design?

Is there a layout container in upp similar to "sizers" ala wxWidgets? A sizer based container is very useful in laying out widgets on dialogs. If used properly, sizers pretty much eliminate the need for a GUI form designer completely.

Thanks,
-G