Impressive. And IMHO not really funny.
It's more sad than funny.

I'm used to SVN and very much like it, but that's mostly because I have full control over my own repository and because the number of people committing is limited and could be managed in decent time.
But I see where his hate for CVS-like is coming from and he has some very good points.

I will have to take some closer look on GIT after this, to get some real experience about different approach to code versioning.

Thanks for the link.
