OK, after some more research I concluded that I need to dig into the win32 API to get this done and then create a U++ package for it. It seems to be possible to do without MFC, since wxWidgets has something similar (wxSplashScreen), although it only works with bitmaps (I want it more flexible). Daunting task for someone that sucks at programming , but what can I do! I would be very happy if some ace programmers out there could point me in the right direction. Anything is welcome!
