I think it's not a good idea to change the source just ahead of full release, but I think this should be TODO item for next version; to minimize amount of warnings with -Wall switch.

And I did want to add -Wall to GCC compilation options, and figured out there's no way in Build methods setup, except adding it directly to debug/speed/size options, so some "global" options edit box would be nice IMO. (another TODO for next version?)

I mostly agree with you. I tried also to build with -Wall and I got tons of warnings... Some code cleanup is needed IMHO.
