Well, I'm talking about the feature of the IDE can hide the content of a function, having a plus signal, most commonly, on the left side together with the number lines. When we click on the plus signal we can hide or show the lines of a function. With this and with a big source file would be very usefully to navigate through the file.