
Subject: Re: Documentation and Topic++
Posted by mirek on Wed, 18 Jun 2008 15:43:48 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

mdelfede wrote on Wed, 18 June 2008 10:29luzr wrote on Wed, 18 June 2008 13:22

Well, I think some nice fulltext works here pretty well. Actually, if I look for help (about anything), I always use google...

Me too, for public APIs and so. But for upp I have to dig inside code... and it's a pity that what I find get lost because we haven't a quick way to add document.

Max

Well, IMO, we are sort of wasting the time, as all suggested approaches are compatible and valuable.

In fact, if you have noticed, there always was an idea of "src" T++ group for reference and "srcdoc" for tutorials and other docs.

Anyway, if you are about to write those tutorial/conceptual docs, I think there is nothing to prevent you doing so now.

Meanwhile, I think it is my responsibility to aim for parser/browser/reference...

Mirek