

---

Subject: Re: Final release

Posted by guido on Thu, 24 Jul 2008 15:52:19 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

mdelfede wrote on Thu, 24 July 2008 17:29guido wrote on Thu, 24 July 2008 17:20Debian is now considered esoteric around here?

Thanks, for nothing, asshole!

Bye!

As some (by luck seldom) idiots out there, you maybe think that an opensource project means that you get work of other people for free without giving back anything.

Well, much better you'll go somewhere else, then.

And, to be more clear, I DON'T think debian is esoteric, I'm just doing a FREE job because I LIKE to do it and because I LIKE to share it with others. That doesn't mean that i MUST do anything.

What I think is really esoteric is your damaged brain.

Bye

Max

You can read my name in the About TheIDE box. Though I'm a bit embarassed for it, as my contribution was very minor back then. Wouldn't complain if it was taken out now.

I have done my fair share of contributions to various parts of the Linux stack, don't worry. As a FOSS contributor you should commit to some responsibility for your work. At least try not to waste other people's time gratuitously. Or else don't complain, when they say Linux is only free when your time has no value.

Anyway, don't take it too personal. That was a scream of frustration. Upp targets primarily mISV. Now if we can't manage to deploy upp itself, how is there any hope at all, developers will be able to deploy their apps with it? What is the point of a Linux port then, other as a toy for college kids? This lame ass attitude is why Linux is stuck at 1% solid.

Sorry pal

---