I mean, let's find the smallest possible set of new features, which makes sense to be implemented together, do them and release. (See also "SCRUM" for reference what I feel)

While I would love version with "all issues solved", I don't believe into such things anymore. There will be always some new issue.

Me too, I would like to know the roadmap for future U++ release. I searched but haven't found discussion about U++ future in the forum.
