Also, now thinking about it... Maybe it would be a good idea to "upgrade" "breakline" and "breakhead" styles to sentinels of one description. In that case, "breakhead" should be something like "section end" and "breakline" as "section begin".

This 'section' (better word needed) would be then used when description of single code item is required to delimit it.

And how can I do that?

Eh, that is nothing that should concern you now What I said is that those two sentinel styles will be understand by code that will be processing T++ documents....

Another small note: I think Upp at the start of document is, in the best case, redundant
