It is the policy of monopoly and monopoly by itself is understandable and is not contested (and is not considered to be bad - it's just a fact).

I do not like the quality of software produced by Microsoft. I remember with horror the installation of the compiler MCS. To install the MCS needs to load the installation system heap additional libraries, which then burdening the system, forcing the system to work slowly.

In contrast - MINGW - sitting quietly in a corner and runs only when I was busy programming.

Of course you can say - it is necessary to program a computer to which you want to install all these libraries. But I have a small business. I want to save my money. And the need to spend or degradation of other applications is a natural irritation. And at Microsoft this position greatly.
