As Mirek suggested, a horseshoe magnet with two ++ at heads, something like this image.(with ++).

The design of site is too old. We need something more modern.

Like KDE, QTSoftware, Gnome, CodeBlocks...

Also first page should contain a short description of project and news updated daily or weekly about the project, new releases, community announcements and so on. The content of site should be more organized (now it is split into 11 sections which contain more sub-sections). A new forum would be nice, because this one has some problems, like showing me online long after i've logout, sometimes some messages are not shown, number of most users online in one day is almost double of current registered users. So we should extract information from it which is of actuality and use a new forum. In that way we know also the exact number of U++ users I'm thinking also at a bug reporting tool and let the forum only for trouble that users have. After these modifications I think U++ will become a more serious project.
