Hello Mirek

I am 95% agree with this statement.

Quote:I believe that current documentation infrastructure, while not perfect, is good enough. What is missing is content

There is a tremendous quantity of U++ code that is not documented, beginning just from the Summary. Also there are many fragments of documentation interesting but unlinked.

A would like to see under Help menu:

- a Summary like the proposed by gprentice

- the existing documents linked to that Summary

- an opportunity for people like me that have some time and want to help U++ project to contribute.

Just a list of documentation to be done linked to the Summary and an opportunity to sign in some place and say YES!, I will do this in four weeks!. The developer of that code only should have to check the new documentation.

If I where a developer without time to document my code and some person would offer to do that, I would be very happy.

Isn't it?

Best regards
Koldo
