jeremy_c wrote on Fri, 05 June 2009 21:04I am wondering if there is a reason why EditField was chosen as the control instead of a 4-6 line DocEdit? Almost all of my commit messages are always over 1 line and cramming them into 1 line makes my commit messages pretty hard to read/understand.

When working with other open source projects as well, commit messages are typically more than one line.

I worked on changing this and I got it to be a DocEdit control rather easy, but the size was not correct. I could make the row height be that of 6 lines, but the control still appeared as 1 line high, even though it was indeed a DocEdit and I could add multiple lines in.

Is there some reason that it shouldn't be a DocEdit?

Thanks,

Jeremy

Uhm, well, perhaps just htat googlecode mirror is designed for single lines....

Anyway, going to change that now.
