Did you try turning on the hotspots before copy. I doubt that when you copy you copy the hotspot positions also, because the format must be readable by other programs and default formats do not have the concept of image hotspots. When you create the new image and paste the graphic, it will have its hotspots put in the default location (0, 0) and this will change the shape of the image once it is rendered.

To activate the hotspot display, press H in the image editor or use the toolbar.
