As I understand, you have finished all big changes, and didn't start any new, so it's maybe good time to let us work out some of those tiny details and release something extra stable for developers who can't upgrade U++ monthly.

Actually, it would be quite nice if somebody would be maintaining some 'stable' release.

Current reality is that each next release is more stable than previous because of bugs fixed. To make 'stable' release really stable, we would need to branch and maintain it, carefully watching svn log and backporting critical fixes..
