Hi-

quick additional note was that through more google search and thinking about this problem I figured out I could install an additional libstdc++ version package that was older. now I can use isql and create a database and don't have to upgrade firebird. the gcc can stay at the newer version. the cool thing was that it was available through opensuse. i don't like adding in a zillion different sources for software if I can avoid it for just one item i need.

very easy fix when you figure out where to look.

thanks,
jim
