sure. no doubt about that.

we are using git in company now for about 1 year. it's been a pain relief . cause branching is really fast and one can keep an eye on the changes that happened. svn is just too slow in that sense. another advantage is the possibility to follow others' repo's and cherry picking some commit while rejecting/ignoring others. nead features that just make life more productive. i can provide some really good information sources on git. maybe reconsider it maybe it's not bad to change/introduce both at once, as one step, to spare some pain.
