By the way, I noticed there are now numbers in the revision comments like RM #nn. Does this mean that it is better to book issues like this one, somewhere else? Like an issue tracker? I am not aware U++ has one. But if that's the case, I will certainly use it if that makes things easier for you.

There is RedMine used as issue tracker for U++.
It's located on internal U++ server, it's not intended for wide public usage, the forum is the correct place to report any bug for ordinary U++ user.
(it's not like the U++ devs want to be some elitist team, but the main server has very limited internet connectivity, and the forum works great)
