thats what makes the difference knowing upp, i didnt know about LocalProcess...
I mentioned it in the first post Also note that there is couple more: RemoteProcess and SlaveProcess, but I never used those, so I don't know much.

Actually after bit more thinking it would be OK to implement it to run just a shell (cmd or sh, platform dependently). And run any other command (e.g. python) from within...

Anyway, I'm glad that it helped you and also really amazed that it works on windows without much trouble
