Thanks for the information.

Yes, I am using windows, as the target PC will all be running windows in one form or another.

I did try lots of things. And as you say you have to close and then reopen to get it to change it. At best, I will use my own coding to change all of the stuff on my window to which every language I want, and set the language to be the other language when I use the filesel part of it. If you do open before you change the language, then the left hand side where it has the video, my documents, and that stays in the original language, until you close and reopen the program.

Only a small number of people will notice that, as most of the time they will use it after they change the language to what they want it to be. I change it between mostly for testing purposes.

I do have to change the PromptOK messages, and they will just have to deal with it saying OK instead of what they use in their own language.

I will take a back up copy of it right now, without the promptok changes, and will post it if anyone is interested in seeing how it works. I still have lots more to go on the program, but the language part is working as best I can get it for now.
