Hello Guys,

IMO, the old CTRL+J navigator is a little bit more powerful than current built-in one. First of all, when you start new search the search field is cleared (After you choose definition you want to jump). It is a little bit faster than "CTRL+G + CTRL+A + Backspace". Moreover old CTRL+J navigator had more information such as file name. And finally all definitions were seen. Now you cannot see everything, because you need to type something in search field.

At the end I would like to notice that perfect solution for me will be old CTRL+J navigator with new built-in limited to current editing file.

Sincerely,
Klugier
