Hello Mq35

The information you have given us is very scarce... Probably you are using MinGW in Windows, is that so?

Maybe you could try first a hello application with plain C (no U++), link to it the libraries, one by one, to see what is the one that is the source of the problem. To do that you can open TheIDE, click on "New package" (lower right side), and choose "Console application (no U++)"
