Actually, as MySQL uses separate file for each table, named the same as the table, it seems to make the sense.

Well, try this (MySql.cpp)

Vector<String> MySqlSession::EnumTables(String database)
{
    Vector<String> out;
    Sql cursor(*this);
    if(cursor.Execute("show tables from " + database))
        out = FetchList(cursor, false); //<< Here is the change
    return out;
}
```

(When the author of MySql interface code is available once again, I will ask him what he meant by uppercasing these names
