Well, there are more reasons, but yes, fine-grained permissions is probably the most important of them. But it is not just about bazaar, it is also about documentation and that would be harder nut to crack... (as .tpp folders are inside are the permissions need to be dynamically updated).

Anyway, WRT bazaar (and maybe some other parts), I hope that in this development cycle we deliver the "uppiaverse" which should allow for gradual transition of bazaar project into separate git repos. Or at least I hope so...

In one extreme I could imagine that even theide moves out of uppsrc to separate repo and the only "locked" part will be core library.
