I think ultimatepp-bazaar can still be a single repo under the umbrella of ultimatepp "organization" on Github, maintained by any volunteering member. This way, it can still be in close relation to the uppsrc, and the transition would be smoother.

As I am active on Github, I can curate that repo, if no one else does it.

The one problem that this step might help solve is that there appear to be many packages in bazaar that nobody touched for years (sometimes even a decade:). Often they do not even compile...

Of course, nobody is deleting anything. It is just not something I want to include with each release. UppHub provides a good opportunity to fix that.
