Hi Mirek,

If there are not any show stoppers (i.e. pending issues or features required to make it to this release), why not start the final testing stage now?

Although I do follow the development most of the time, I only use stable U++ releases for my products. This is the only way for me to know that the development is not in the middle of something critical causing some potential bug end up in my product and result in a bunch of user support cases.

Best regards,

Tom
