Cool, I'll check it out.

Yes, I originally started with a single RichTextCtrl but this client does more than just displaying text or images, it has to be able to do custom mouseovers with active elements, transitions, embedded video and audio, Downloadable files and each element has to be trackable, searchable, updateable, deleteable and it ideally should support group-level encryption. RichTextCtrl alone can get you a lot of that stuff but not all of it even with custom elements.
