Well, the only possible problem I see is that it could steer U++ in wrong direction - e.g. I think OS X is absolute must ASAP... In any case, I believe that it should be considered as "hint" rather than firm development plan...

And there is should also be the "poll reset" sort of event...

I see, it's possible for Ultimate ++ goes to wrong direction.

May be we can separate into two development paths if possible, the first path is main milestone of Ultimate++, maybe you can describe the main feature that will be developed and the second path is some features that Ultimate++'s users like to have for their need but will be benefit to others.

Both path can be voted by donation, but the first path will have higher priority.
