As I see it, there is quite an easy way to improve Ultimate++'s fame which has not been exploited up till now.

The web based search engines (Google and others) seem to rank their entries mainly based on the count of links from one page to another.

To support this behavior, it suggests itself that all forums members who run their own web site, install a link to each other forum member who does the same.

This is especially true for the Ultimate++ SourceForge page as SourceForge is intensely searched - not only by agents.
