The main reasons because derivating from containers seem to be:
1- the lack of virtual destructor,
2- member function are not virtual then you can override them.

However in my case I am just adding a few properties to Vector<> and I don't want to have to rewrite the Add()/Remove()/... then I'll stick with inheritance. I agree that composition should be the preferred way in more complex cases.

Thanks,
Victor