I have created TheIDE page on Wikipedia. It is still in work but here it is.
TheIDE

Unfortunately it is drafted. So it will be helpful if someone knows well about the IDE or anyone to expand it.

Hello Sayem,

This is good direction - TheIDE should definitely has it's own dedicated article on Wikipedia. In context what could be written you can compare it with other articles that refer to the same topic. For example the main description of QTCreator looks very good. You could write that we are supporting three compilers MSVC, Clang, GCC. Screenshot with information table will be much appreciate.

JavaScript as a language could also be added. Skylar (our web framework) requires it.

You could publish initial version and we will review. Changes on the wiki could be done anytime.

Thanks for helping with that! Together we are stronger!

Hello Sqyme one more time,

If you know other languages that English you could create port U++ article and TheIDE to that language. It will be helpful and it will encourage people with knowledge of that language to try our solution.

Well I know a handful of languages, but I strongly know 3 languages (including English). I will definitely translate once the page is completed

Thanks for mentioning

Hello,

I would be happy to translate it to French

Hello Xemuth,

There is a need of translating U++ article to French, also. This is right now far more important than TheIDE article, which is not ready yet. It should give us additional audience speaking this language. Also, we should rename Ultimate++ to U++ at some moment. I mostly eliminated the first name from our site.

Sayem, in context of TheIDE article you should remove Macro Manager in the features section. Macro Manager is TheIde extension manager not a tool. You could even wrote about it in separate section like "Extensibility".
