Ebojd, I think upp-portage should be placed with releases, not in special category.

If I understand your statement, that was a mistake. I changed the upp-portage package release to be 2007.1rc3. Is this what you were referring to, or do I need to rename the package?

Thanks for catching the upp-portage release thing. It should be changed now.

No, sorry, what I wanted to say is that I believe that file should be called like

upp-portage-2007.1rc3.zip

and be placed in 2007.1rc3 group.

There should be no "upp-portage" group.

Ah... OK. How about I name it using the gentoo conventions (which are very similar to UPP's). This would make it upp-portage-2007.1_beta1.zip. The only problem here is the versioning between upp and upp-portage might confuse a couple of people, but would likely be the best.

I tried to hide/remove the package and had problems... I'll have to take another look at it tonight after work.

Well, we had beta1 before... My undestanding is that beta is version before "gold" release, supposed to be changed. "rc" is file that, if succesful, is just renamed (by deleting "rc" part) and then is final.

Anyway, the nameing convention of portage file is not that important IMHO. But it logically belongs to the group, no need to create a special group...

Agreed. I got SF's use of package and group mixed up. With any luck this fixed it, and with any luck will not happen again...

  Thanks again
