Subject: future of ultimate++
Posted by wimvanherp on Mon, 22 Oct 2007 19:48:45 GMT

Ultimate++ seems a fascinating product but i wonder if it is not to dependant of one person. Is the development of this product carried by a whole community or will it collapse on the dark day that Mirek moves to a nice island in the big ocean far away from bits and bytes

I hope that the furious reactions can convince me this is a ridiculous thought, but in the meantime I have my doubts...

Subject: Re: future of ultimate++
Posted by mirek on Mon, 22 Oct 2007 20:08:11 GMT

wimvanherp wrote on Mon, 22 October 2007 15:48Ultimate++ seems a fascinating product but i wonder if it is not to dependant of one person. Is the development of this product carried by a whole community or will it collapse on the dark day that Mirek moves to a nice island in the big ocean far away from bits and bytes

I hope that the furious reactions can convince me this is a ridiculous thought, but in the meantime I have my doubts...

 Well, I guess every OSS project has to go through such a phase.

IMO, you just have to take the bet and perhaps try to live through it....

In any case, sources are out there. If it ever happens (but I like my bits and bytes!) and U++ has enough users by the time, I bet they will fork the thing and continue.

Mirek