Description
It's possible to generate command line options to use with theide or umk executables. Currently, there are minor differences between them, like no selectable threading options for theide or showing message box, if build fails for umk. Reference for request: http://www.ultimatepp.org/forums/index.php?t=msg&#38;th=9024 The proposed patch attached.

This is interesting and useful feature, however, maybe it should be rather somehow connected to "Export" command in the output mode?

#5 - 12/15/2014 10:17 PM - Sender Ghost

Currently, it uses "Main package configuration", "Setup -> Be verbose" states and "connected" to selected package as a menu. Also, it could be configured to be invoked on key combination. In the "Output mode" window some of mentioned features will be not configurable without closing this window. Not to mention about three opened windows at the same time (if there is no other methods, of course). Either, the "Output mode" window should be redesigned, e.g. to allow selection of "Main package configuration" and some button to invoke "Command line options" window, at least. I could try to develop such a prototype, then will see.

#6 - 12/16/2014 01:54 AM - Sender Ghost
